FELL DOWN AN ELEVATOR SHAFT.

John Freeman Dropped From the Fifth Floor.

HE IS FATALLY INJURED.

STRUCK AGAINST PROJECTING IRON BEAMS AS HE TURNED OVER AND OVER.

HE WAS A HOD CARRIER.

His Hold Loosened on a Load of Bricks and in an Effort to Catch Them He Lost His Balance.

They will have to handle the body of poor John Freeman tenderly when it is prepared for burial, for it is literally broken to pieces. He was not dead at noon Monday, but that breath still found its way through his rib-pierced lungs was a puzzle to the physicians.

Freeman was a hod-carrier for Contractor W. C. Musick, 26 North Ninth street, who is building the three stately buildings at

JOHN FREEMAN FALLS FIVE STORIES.

Tenth and Spruce streets, which will make a magnificent addition to the Cupples' group in that quarter. These new buildings are on the northwest corner of Tenth and Spruce and are being hurried to completion to meet the demand of wholesale firms to avail themselves of the facilities to be had there for handling merchandise.

Freeman, a short, portly fellow, about 35 years old, worked for Contractor Musick for ten years, in fact nearly ever since he came to America, from Dublin. The hods of brick and mortar were being lifted from the first to the fifth floor through the lift elevator shaft Monday morning and Freeman, with the other dozen or more carriers, stood at the top of the shaft to bear the hods to where the material was needed.

Freeman was receiving brick and when his hod stopped at the shaft top he reached over to lift it to his shoulders. Whether it was heavier than usual or not, the weight unbalanced him, the loaded hod slipped from his grasp and shot down the shaft. Freeman instantly made a desperate grab to catch it, his foot slipped and he plunged headlong after the hod and its scattered contents.

Freeman screamed as he fell. Half a dozen hod carriers saw him drawn into the open death trap, but it was so sudden none of them could reach him.

Along the shaft unfinished beams project, and there is only room for the freight carriages to shoot up and down as it is propelled by the little steam engine below. At the fourth floor Freeman's shoulder struck an iron beam and he was turned half over. At the third floor the base of his head struck another beam, fracturing the skull. Dropping like a leaden ball at the second floor, his back struck another beam, spraining it not far from the spinal column. At the first floor he struck another heavy timber, fracturing a number of ribs, and then plunged on to the landing stage downward in a pile of shavings.

Fellow-workmen were at his side in a few seconds, but he was limp and unconscious. An ambulance took him to the City Dispensary where Dr. Kearney temporarily dressed his wounds and hurried him to the City Hospital.

Dr. Kearney did not think anything could prevent the injuries from proving fatal. Freeman is married and lived at St. Angelo and Chouteau avenues.

FOUGHT WITH AN ANACONDA.

Terrible Struggle in a Philadelphia Museum.

A WATCHMAN'S RIBS BROKEN.

A PONY WAS CRUSHED TO DEATH BY THE INFURIATED REPTILE.

EVERY BIG BONE WAS CRACKED

Finally the Mammoth Snake Was Lassoed and the Watchman Was Taken to a Hospital, Where He May Die.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 15.—A huge anaconda on exhibition in a museum broke loose yesterday afternoon and did great damage before it was finally lassoed and returned to its cage. It broke several of the ribs of Samuel Mascher, the museum watchman; crushed the life out of a pony, and threatened death to several men before it was returned to its cage.

While Mascher was making his usual rounds he discovered that the reptile had worked one of the boards loose from its cage and was sticking its head out in an ominous manner. Luckily the museum was not open. Mascher at once saw that he had a dangerous customer to deal with, for in another minute the reptile would be entirely at liberty. He tried to push the board back in place, hoping that the anaconda would crawl back inside after being disturbed, but his calculation proved to be wrong. Instantly the great reptile reached out its head and grabbed Mascher around the waist, and threatened death to several men before it was returned to its cage.

A valuable trick pony was tied to a feed-box alongside the anaconda's cage. Frightened at the watchman's screams, it commenced to jump around, and it was a good thing for Mascher that it did so, for this action probably saved his life. The reptile gradually unwound itself from around Mascher and turned its attention to the pony. The latter, being very fast, could not escape. It neighed and snorted with fear, but these demonstrations seemed only to increase the activity of the anaconda. No amount of kicking on the part of the pony could avert the impending disaster. Mascher, but surely the great reptile would itself crush the life out of Mascher attempted to beat him off with a club, and the pony tried to escape. In a few minutes the pony was dead. Every large bone in his body was broken.

In the meantime the watchman commenced to faint. In the excitement he had not noticed the several of his ribs were broken. After he had tried in vain to beat the anaconda off he ran to the rescue part of the museum and summoned a number of other employees. They seized clubs and other weapons and went to the rescue of the pony, but they were too late. The winding his long body when the party entered. He appeared to be getting ready for another fight, and all his movements were so hostile that the men retreated hastily and held a council of war. Finally they decided to lasso him, and his feat was accomplished after great difficulty. A rope was drawn closely around his neck and he was temporarily tethered to the outside of his cage. Later he was placed inside.

EJECTED BY MR. LESUEUR.

Journalist Offended Him Concerning the Bland-North Affair.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Nov. 15.—When Secretary of State Lesueur returned to the capital from St. Louis yesterday he learned that the Republican organ here, the Republican Courier, had intimated that he had falsified the records in connection with the Bland-North affair. This morning the business manager of the paper, E. S. Lynck, entered the Secretary of State's office, and the indignant Secretary not only expressed his opinion of Mr. Lynck, but caught him by the neck and forcibly ejected him. There was a red-hot time for a few minutes, but Lynck made little resistance and went away.

MANDATE IN DURRANT'S CASE.

To Be Issued Immediately by the Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 15.—On motion of Assistant Attorney General Anderson, the Supreme Court to-day decided to issue immediately its mandate in the Durrant murder case. No representative of Durrant was in court when the motion was made and the court after a hurried consultation of the bench announced through Chief Justice Fuller that the mandate should issue forthwith.

Mr. Anderson, who is the attorney for the State, thinks this will settle the matter and hasten Durrant's execution. He said he would have made the motion sooner, but for the necessity of giving notice to Durrant's counsel.

BANKER TRACY'S GRIEF, OR THE TRUE STORY OF A TRAMP WHO BATHED.

An unknown tramp entered the residence of Banker A. L. Tracy of St. Joseph, Mo., last week, during the absence of the family, and took a bath. Then he donned a $60 suit of clothes, piled his discarded apparel in the middle of the room and departed. Now the other members of the Amalgamated Order of Hoboes are looking for his scalp.

As Dusty Rhodes was walking down The street a quiet place he spied. The banker's folks were out of town, And soon he found himself inside.

He looked around, admiring all That he encountered in his path; He viewed the pictures on the wall, And then, ah, then, he took a bath!

He searched through all the closets there, And found a $60 suit. And when he donned it, with an air Of pride, he truly was a "beaut."

Forth he emerged upon the street, And went his way, nor came again; And if that tramp you'd chance to meet, You'd know him not from other men.

A MANIAC IN POSSESSION.

Terrible Night Scene at 1626 Carr Street.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN FLEE.

JOHN LUYENDYK SMASHES ALL THE FURNITURE ON THE FIRST FLOOR.

HE SUDDENLY BECOMES INSANE

His Father Couldn't Quiet Him and the Other Members of the Family Were Huddled Together on the Floor Above.

A domestic tragedy was averted in the little frame cottage, 1626 Carr street, Sunday night by the hasty retreat of the intended victims to a place of safety on the floor above.

The frame building is an old-fashioned oddity, well back from the street and walled in by substantial brick houses of modern build.

On the first floor lives John Luyendyk, his second wife, two small children, his mother-in-law and his son, John, by his first wife. John is 28 years old and, with his father, is engaged in soliciting insurance for an industrial company.

For a week or more John, the son, has been morose, and when he did have anything to say it was to complain that his father had turned against him and was scheming to have him put out of the way. Nothing could disabuse his mind of this fancied aversion on the part of his father, and on several occasions he asked his step-mother what was the cause of it.

John is of a religious turn, and if he took part in any kind of social function it was in a church or mission hall of some kind. He was a regular attendant at the Salvation Army and Dr. Gott's missions on Franklin avenue. He was at the latter Sunday night, but did not remain through the service.

He reached home about 9 o'clock, and went to bed. Shortly before 10 o'clock he awoke his father and wife by rattling on the window which opens into their room. He was heard to go to the rear of the house, but returned in a few minutes. He lighted a candle and an instant later smashed the window with his fist. Jerking open his own door, he sprang out into the hall and lunged against that of his father's room, but it was locked.

Telling like a madman, "I'll kill that woman, she cannot trifle with me," he pounded away on the door with his bare fist until she splintered the heavy pine plank and forced the catch of the lock to give way. He sprang into his father's room, but it was locked.

It was dark in the bedroom, and picking their way the wife with the children and her mother hurried out of the room in bare feet and in night attire. The father lit a lamp and tried to quiet his son, but with the strength of a maniac he went through the bedroom and kitchen, smashing the furniture to pieces. The father stood by, fearing to engage in a struggle with him, for he is of powerful physique and a giant over his father in strength.

It was nearly an hour before a policeman could be found, and in the meantime young Luyendyk demolished everything he could lay his hands on.

When the patrol wagon came the crazy son was sent to the City Jail. The only cause the family is able to give of the maniac's sudden derangement is that about eight years ago he had meningitis, and has been subject to fits at intervals since, though he was never violent before.

POLITICAL CONCESSIONS IN CUBA NOT MADE TO SECURE PEACE.

"They Are Given to the Repentant, but for the Rebels There Will Be No Temporizing Measures."

Gen. Pando Makes an Official Statement of Blanco's Policy to Sylvester Scovel, the Special Representative of the Post-Dispatch.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch. From a Staff Correspondent. Copyrighted by Press Publishing Company, 1897.

HAVANA, Cuba, Nov. 15.—The Post-Dispatch correspondent was arrested immediately on his return to Havana and politely conducted before Judge Bernal to show cause why he should not be sent to prison for a least six years and pay a fine of $600 for having procured a passport with another's name and used such "false credentials" in a forbidden trip to Gen. Gomez's camp last winter, which trip ended in the jail at Sancti Spiritus.

While nominally under arrest at the palace I met Gen. Pando, the chief of Marshal Blanco's military staff and spokesman. This genial Spanish lieutenant-general unbent sufficiently to give to the Post-Dispatch the following authorized statement, which has been translated and retranslated, so that it might exactly express the general's dictation. The original is in Spanish, and is in Gen. Pando's own handwriting. The literal English translation has lost the smoothness of its author's phrases:

"The Government and Gen. Blanco, both represent tolerance without debility, and energy without cruelty and the policy of to-day, compatible with an energetic military action, consists in being generous with the repentant and inexorable with the impenitent traitors.

"It is a very grave error to suppose that the political concessions of the Spanish Government have been given to an enemy to secure peace. They are given to the loyal and to the repentant; but for the incendiaries, the dynamiters, Spain reserves the action of force, energetic and without temporizing measures.

"Cuba, then, to avoid being a chaos or the theater of bloody strife, ought to remain Spanish, because only by belonging to Spain can be guaranteed its commercial relations with the civilized world, especially so when the Isthmus of Panama shall no longer be an isthmus or the two oceans be joined in some other manner.

"The United States are more interested than any other nation in Cuba remaining under the Spanish flag, because they prefer to assure the prosperity of their commerce to making enemies of Europe.

"About independence, let us not speak, because no person of sane judgment ought to take into consideration such a hypothesis."

No other Spaniard in Cuba understands the situation better than does Gen. Pando, who for sixteen years of peace and of war has held many civil and military posts of importance in the island. He was made the adopted son of Santiago de Cuba, the most Cuban city in Cuba, and he knows the real needs of the land. What his military policy is to be, I shall send in another dispatch.

Gen. Blanco is making strong efforts to counteract Weyler's mistakes. The proclamation of Nov. 12, if obeyed, means much more food in the country near the towns. It directs that no more property shall be destroyed by the troops in the country, and especially orders that the newly-ploughed fields near the towns shall be respected. The only restriction is that the field inclosures shall have openings or gates on each side in order to allow movements of troops.

Under this proclamation the reconcentrados able to work have improved the opportunity to raise food for themselves and their friends.

SYLVESTER SCOVEL

A CUBAN TEACHES THE SPANIARDS WHAT IT IS TO BE MERCIFUL.

Special Cable From a Staff Correspondent. Copyright by the Press Publishing Company, 1897.

HAVANA, Cuba, Nov. 15.—The chivalry of a Cuban leader, Juan Delgado, has been luminous this deadly and barbarous war. He taught the Spaniards that a brave soldier is always merciful; that he does not make war against starving women and children, against helpless, wounded men. Delgado had a hard fight last week with the Spanish regulars near Managua. In the night, and after hand-to-hand a brilliant charge and after hand-to-hand fighting, Delgado captured a Spanish Captain and fourteen soldiers. Most of them were severely wounded by machetes and bullets.

While Weyler was here scores of wounded Cubans were stabbed to death with bayonets or shot to death as they lay stretched on the field. It fared differently with Delgado's prisoners. His surgeons dressed the wounds of their enemies. Then, while the night was still raging, Delgado hoisted a flag of truce and under it returned to the commander the fifteen men, who, they were severely wounded by machetes and bullets.

The splendid chivalry of this action touched the Spanish commander, who returned, sending word back to Delgado by the wounded men's escort: "I will not fight longer today with an enemy who has treated the wounded Spanish soldiers so nobly."

Such is one happy incident. On the Wall Street.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Prices at the opening of the Stock Exchange showed small losses for the most part, though the tone of the market was decidedly better than yesterday's. The declines were prominent especially in the weakness of the oil stocks, which closed off from 1 1/2 to 2 1/2 each share showing a small gain. Bungeochemical

Trading was remarkably dull up to noon, partly in waiting for news from Washington on the expected Supreme Court decision on the new maximum price for wheat and partly in sympathy with the London market, where there is some uneasiness regarding European politics. The tone of the market was heavy and the tendency downward. Consolidated Gas lost 6 points net, falling to 185. The price of the 1926-27 2½ per cent. Gas fell 1½, ex-dividend, and the general list fell an additional fraction. Sales of stocks to noon, 92,740 shares.

In the bond market Omaha and St. Louis American bonds were generally weak.

SALVATION ARMY LADS AND LASSES AS DETECTIVES.

Wayward Girls Returned to Their Homes.

Men Who Desert Families Made to Assist Them.

Novel Work Undertaken by the Organization Which Has Agencies in Every Land.

Men and women who have bought copies of the War Cry on the street from the Salvation Army lasses cannot have failed to notice a department devoted "to those in distress."

The department each week contains a number of advertisements for missing persons, and heading the two or three columns of inquiries is an explanatory paragraph to the effect that "any poor girl in need of a friend may write to Consul Mrs. Booth-Tucker, 122 West Fourteenth street, New York City, who will try to help and give advice where possible."

Following this notice to friendless girls is a statement that the Salvation Army operates a bureau for tracing lost and missing friends, and that thousands have been found every year.

"This is a delicate way the Salvation Army has of volunteering to search for runaway husbands, men who have betrayed girls and left them to bear the burden of disgrace alone, wayward girls whose fathers and mothers are anxious to reclaim them, children who have been lured from home—all manner of lawbreakers and evildoers."

"I should better than announcing that the Salvation Army has a detective agency, for it is just what the inquiry department amounts to."

The annual report of the army in England has recently been made and it is shown that more than 100 missing persons were found last year. The report for the army in the United States has not been completed, but the figures, it can be estimated in advance, will greatly exceed those of the English army. The number of missing persons found in America two years ago was 246, and the year before that the number was still larger.

Three important discoveries were made last year in St. Louis. Within the last year, one case was that of a man who had abandoned his wife in London, taking with him two daughters. The wife reported his flight to the bureau in London and submitted photographs of the runaway husband. The facts were forwarded to the American headquarters in New York and enough was learned to warrant the belief that the man had gone West. He was traced to St. Louis, and two of the Salvation Army soldiers at last found him in South St. Louis, where he was engaged in the drug business.

When charged with his identity the drugist denied that he was the man, and angrily ordered the Salvationists from his place. The men in the red jerseys proceeded gently to dislodge the drugist, who by degrees admitted that he was a wife in England. When the interview ended at an end, the drugist had agreed to send the woman money. He kept his word, and has kept up the remittances regularly since then.

The best detective the army had, a man noted all over England for his sagacity and shrewdness, died about eight weeks ago. He was called Harland, and it is conceded by every one save his conservative friends, the sleuths of Scotland Yard, that if any man ever came near bringing to justice the notorious Jack the Ripper, that man was Clifford Harland.

The stories told of Harland, particularly his researches into the world-known Whitechapel murders, by Maj. Miles, the new brigadier of the army, are most entertaining. They show Harland to have been a man of rare tact and insight, and as clever at deduction as Conan Doyle made Sherlock Holmes.

"It was really a pity," said Maj. Miles to a Post-Dispatch reporter Monday, "that the army did not institute the Salvation Army detective bureau." "About the detective bureau," said Harland, "I was already was noted in London as one of the keenest private detectives who ever trailed an evildoer."

"Since the army was organized we have received letters from anxious mothers, kinsmen or that, and one of these letters, I think, asserted that the old friend of mine who had been moved by a desire to help the writer of the letter, a party to a party, had been killed. He was working on the case during the summer, and, referred to a good but misguided girl support the child, and the fact was made a department of investigation was plain at once."

"Other cases were taken up and worked out carefully, and the department has grown until it is of vast importance, as you have seen for yourself."

When all London was breathless at the savage atrocity of the Whitechapel murders, Harland set to work quietly to run down the man. He sent an assistant to board in that his assistant took the identical boarding place of the murderer.

"If you recall the nature of the murders SEAMED WITH SCARS.

Dispensary Physicians Much Interested by a Monday Morning Patient.

Henry Smith, colored, freeman on the Grey Eagle, was an applicant for surgical aid at the City Dispensary Monday.

He had been attacked by others of his race on the trip up and severely injured. Dr. Kearney dressed Henry's cuts, bites and gashes and turned him over to the police, as Henry said he had no idea who the men were that beat him. All of them, he said, were roustabouts. Smith is only about five feet, stocky and coal black and he wears more scars than a veteran of four wars. There is not an inch of space on his head between scars, some from three and four inches long and evidently deep.

Dr. Kearney pronounced it the most wonderfully scarred head he had ever seen.

POST-OFFICE AFFAIRS.

Postal Savings the Feature of Gen. Gary's Report.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 15.—The first annual report of Postmaster General James A. Gary has been made public. Its leading feature is a strong advocacy of postal savings depositories. Gen. Gary argues at length in favor of this scheme, urging that it would encourage thrift among the people and giving figures showing how it works in other countries.

The increase of the postal deficit for 1897 is attributed to depressed business conditions. The experimental rural free delivery is commended.

The abuse of the second-class mail privileges is also mentioned. The estimates of the revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, are: Total postal revenue for 1897, $2,062,627.73; add a per cent. of $1,135,273.13. Estimated revenue for 1898, $2,078,732.32. Total estimated revenue for 1898, $2,078,732.32. Estimated expenditures for 1898, $2,078,732.32. Estimated deficiency for 1898, $2,078,732.32.

ROSE SAETTERLE INSANE.

She Was a Domestic at the Duestrow House at the Time of the Murder.

Rose Saetterle, who was a servant in the Duestrow house when Mrs. Duestrow and her baby was murdered, is an inmate of the observation ward at the City Hospital. She is a raving maniac and not an intelligent creature escapes her lips.

She was taken from the Planters' Hotel Sunday night after having created a scene. She was formerly a servant there and she returned to see Maggie Walsh, another servant. Then Rose went to the housekeeper and applied for a situation. When there was no vacancy, she screamed and attempted to throw herself from a window on the eighth floor.

Rose Saetterle is about 28 years old. She is tall and slender, has large black eyes and long black hair. Her complexion is good, and were it not for the wild expression, she might be termed pretty. Her speech is not very clear, and she is unable to comprehend any of the questions put to her by the doctors. She sings almost all the time and walks back and forth the length of the ward, stopping every once in a while to dance. She sings in English and German. She does not mention Duestrow's name for observation. Dr. Sutterle says that her mind has been permanently destroyed, and he will send her to the Insane Asylum in a few days.

She says that her husband is a drunkard and has abused her shamefully. For a long time she has been suffering from a nervous breakdown, and she has been treated very badly by her husband. She says that she has been ill-treated and that she wants a divorce.

Looking for the Saw That Dismembered Guldensuppe.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Mrs. Augusta Nack, the midwife who turned state's evidence against Martin Thorn, charged with the murder of William Guldensuppe, was taken out to College Hill yesterday in a coach. Her mission was to locate the saw which she said was used to cut Guldensuppe's body in two.

She did not fix the spot exactly, but thinks she came very near it. Later an effort will be made to dig it up.

THE "NEW FIGURE" FOR WOMEN.

Fashion this Winter has decreed that women must have a low bust, and now, for a fashionable dress show a strange change these bright afternoons.

HOUNDED BY JOSEPH SPRAY.

Mrs. Baker Now a Patient in the Hospital Observation Ward.

Mrs. Kate Baker is at the City Hospital for observation. She was arrested by the Fourth District police Sunday night in a lodging-house, near Fourteenth street and Franklin avenue.

After he was freed from Mr. Walker, he began persecuting her. She says he broke in the door of her house and threatened to kill her. She fled to the police and Spray was arrested and a warrant issued against him, charging assault to kill.

Mrs. Baker says she feared Spray so much she sold her furniture, and now she has fled to the police. She was taken to a rooming-house on Franklin avenue and laid down on the floor and went to sleep. She says she was drugged by Spray's persecutions and drove her to it.

Palma la Contessa Guicciardini comes to us crowned with success and with the inalienable right of the most prominent and fashionable people of England and Italy, the former fields of her labors. She is in beautiful parlor at the St. Nicholas, expounding, advocating and defending this misunderstood and much-abused science. In her own words, but unfortunately here without the accompaniment of her rich, deep voice, we have the story of her adoption and her consequent success in PALMISTRY: "I was originally led to my work by a conscious adaptability—being naturally somewhat psychic and intensely sympathetic. More than this, however, I was drawn by the desire to be of help to my fellow-creatures. I could see the promise of great usefulness held out to one who would pursue the science earnestly and conscientiously. That I saw right has been fully proven. From those to whom my advice, admonition or encouragement came at just the moment when a misstep meant a blighted future. None, I hope, will be impressed that my knowledge of the science of PALMISTRY is at all mysterious. I am not a mystic, neither am I an exponent of mystery. From the very beginning of character, temperament, tendencies, all defined in the hand; and from circumstances, influences, etc., brought to bear upon these traits and also marked in the hand, I am enabled to read the destiny, or, better, result to my client, should those indications with the accompanying circumstances, etc., be disregarded. I am enabled to admonish him what to avoid and to counsel him what to embrace to his advantage. This proving the use and great good of the science of PALMISTRY in the every-day struggle for happiness and success."

CHASING AN ASSASSIN.

ROBERT KNIGHT AGAIN EXPLAINS WHY HIS WIFE IS WEARING MEN'S CLOTHES.

WISHED TO AVENGE A MURDER.

Located the Criminal in the Reverse House and the Two Took Rooms There.

With the fear that he and his pretty young wife will be sent to police court, and from there to the Work-house, Robert Knight has made a full statement of why his wife was dressed in male attire at the Reverse House, 88 North Sixth street, where they were arrested at 2 o'clock Saturday morning.

Knight witnessed the cruel murder of his most intimate friend a year ago in Patrick County, Va., by William Morris, and over the death of his friend, Alexander Suck, he made an oath that he would avenge the crime if it took him to the end of the world.

Knight is a prisoner in the Four Courts holdover, and his wife, Nellie Knight, the pretty young woman who is still wearing trousers is confined in Matron Gilbert's detention room.

They were arrested in a room at the Reverse House, where the woman was masquerading as a man. Chief Desmond promised to send them to police court.

"Now," said Knight, "that the Chief says he will send us to the Work-house, I will tell just why we are here and what he has been through."

"A year ago my dearest friend, the boy with whom I was raised and who was to me as a brother, was shot down before my eyes in our own home, one of the old farms of Patrick County, Virginia. The assassin was William Morris. The victim was Alexander Suck."

"I would have avenged the deed then had I been armed. I tried to capture him, but he got away."

"Just before my friend died he looked up and asked me if I would take his place in the hunt for Morris, and I raised my hand and swore that I would give the remainder of my life to the pursuit of Morris."

"I sold the little I had, realized $500, and then have been on the trail of Morris. 'Last February a man I met on a train told me to write to an Indianapolis detective agency and they could help me out. Foolishly I did so and paid $5 for a badge and a pamphlet of instructions. I thought that the badge would help me out in case I got in trouble, but now I see it does not."

"The first trace I got of Morris was last spring in Louisville. From there I traced him to Scott County, Mo., where he came to work on a farm. When I got there he was gone, but I met Nellie Martin, the girl and wife of Morris, who told me that Morris had gone back to Louisville, and I went after him."

"Soon after that I sent for Nellie Martin, and we were married in Bardville, Ky. Morris then came to Louisville, and I traced Morris to Chicago and from there to St. Louis."

"I have the Whitechapel murderer all but in my hands," said he. "The next woman to be dismembered is Jane Walker, whatever her name might have been. If you will just keep an eye on Jane Walker, my friend, you'll catch the murderer in the act."

"Harland had learned that the woman had suddenly become a warning, and he had taken to a band of ruffians in Whitechapel. She was frequently taken to one of the other poor wretches murdered by the ripper, and he was sure she had been marked by the assassin."

"The conservative Scotland Yard police, who were never known to jump at conclusions, were particularly wary of my advice. Two months after Jane Walker was murdered, the police had learned that the woman had been killed, and they were sure she had been marked by the assassin."

THE THEATERS.

According to the factious programme editor, the plot of Ward and Vokes' new play, "The Governors," is "Boe," a benighted bulldog, with a corrugated countenance. This means that the plot is of no consequence, though it may be observed parenthetically that Boe is a very consequential entity, being the idol of the company and the apple of Margaret Daly Vokes' eye. The show consists of specialties by a large and clever company, with just enough of a framework to justify their introduction. Happy Ward and Harry Vokes drift in and out, as occasion requires, doing absurd things and cracking jokes after the old Percy and Harold way. They have a good deal of new "business" and many new jokes. Margaret Daly Vokes impersonates a basile virgin with a budget of funny stories, which she insists on telling, to the great discomfort of the other characters. It is a realistic bit of work and worth observing closely. Lucy Daly dances and sings. If you have ever seen her, you know what that means. If you have never seen her you have missed one of the real pleasures vouchsafed the playhouse patron. She is the quintessence of grace. All those long-featured, clean-limbed Dalys are natural dancers, and Lucy is the queen of the tribe. She might give a mazarinka on the keyboard of a piano, making her own music with her own pretty feet, so light is she on her toes. She is on the stage much of the time and interest in her never wanes. Her dancing partner is Johnny Page. He is an acrobat and the audience last night could not see enough of him. Gus Weinberg does a specialty and assists in making most of the scenes successful. The opening at the Olympic last night was the largest of the season.
